Columbia Tech Tip # 109

One of the challenges faced by finishers is making sure they are putting down the right amount of product. Too much and you can cause runs, sags and even cracking. Too little and you can cause an uneven finish, streaks and orange peel. Each product you spray may have different wet film requirements. The best way to know if you are putting on the right amount is to use a wet film thickness gauge. You simply put the gauge down and whichever tooth touches is the amount of coating applied. Properly measuring wet film thickness can reduce rework and increase productivity as well as help ensure a properly applied coating. Ask us for your free wet film gauge!
